THE AGES OF REASON.
——FRENCH Liberty's a farce:
Like Collot d'Herbois, all her sons are players:
All have their exits and their entrances.
France, in her time, in vice and folly's Drama,
Hath play'd sev'n acts. First, Philosophic Infants
Nurs'd by Voltaire, and mewling for reform:
Then Tiers-Etat; with scraps of Rights of Man,
And front rebellions, with monarchic pow'r
Unwillingly combin'd. Then citizens,
Frantic as Hell, with many a fête and hymn
To strumpet Goddesses. Then Jacobins,
Full of strange projects, bloody as the 'pard,
Jealous of neighb'ring nations, quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble, dear Equality,
Even in the cannon's mouth. Then Regicides,
In foul convention, drench'd with Louis' blood,
With red-capt heads, or heads cut off sans form,
Full of old Rome and modern Guillotine,
And so they play their part. The sixth age shifts
Into a lean, half-famished horde of slaves,
Five knaves their kings, their pouches cramm'd with mandats,
Their youthful constitution far too free
For their shrunk souls; and the big voice of Freedom
Turning to childish adulation, courts
A proud Directory. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful Revolution,
Is barb'rous anarchy, mere savage life;
Sans trade, sans laws, sans God, sans every thing.
HORATIO.

FROM A LATE ENGLISH PAPER.

BUONAPARTE's EXPEDITION.

☞ During the present anxiety respecting the design of Buonaparte's expedition, and the practicability of the voyage to India, the following observation on the Monsoons, extracted from the Bombay Calender must be interesting.

OUR readers will not require to be told, that our year is divided into two grand seasons, or as they are called, the South West and North East Monsoons; that the first generally prevails from May to the middle of September, inclusive, the other during the remaining months; yet we must premise this as an introduction to what follows:

We need scarcely to observe, that during the South West Monsoon, all the ports and roadsteds on this side of India deny approach—so much so that between the 15th of May and the 1st of September, ships are precluded by their policies from touching upon the Malabar coast, or from lying in Surat roads between the 1st of May and the 1st of September. Generally speaking the Monsoon is considered to extend from Dunder-head, the southern extremity of Ceylon, to the Persian gulph; in order to attain which, they who should sail at this season, would be obliged to make what is called a southern passage, that is, go first to the south of the Equator, before they could stretch over to the westward, a voyage that would occupy for Muscat about 40 days, and to Bussorah about two months; the same objection exists against sailing at this season to any part of the Arabian coast; as for the Red Sea, it is considered in vain to attempt entering it at this season—nor can it be said to be favourable to sail now to the cape, the Mauius, or any port to the westward.

To the other side of India on the contrary, it is now the most advantageous period of departing. From the middle of April even to the middle of August, a voyage to Madras may be made in about 12 or 15 days; to Bengal, from 15 to 20 days; after this time it becomes excessively tedious from the necessity of keeping to the Eastern side of the bay to avoid the violent weather on the Coromandel coast; for the same reason the south west Monsoon is eligible to leave Bombay for any of the ports in the gulph of Bengal or the straits of Malacca: hence also it is the season for sailing to China; after the 20th of August, however, what is called the direct passage to China becomes very precarious, with much probality of finding blowing weather in the China seas.

With regard to the ports from which ships may be expected to arrive at Bombay during this monsoon; it may be laid down as a general rule, that the quarters favorable to sail during any season, are those that it is unfavourable to expect arrivals from, and vice versa: hence, from the Persian Gulph, the Red Sea, the Cape of Good Hope, and the westward in general, this is the most seasonable period to expect arrivals; from Muscat, a trip may now be made in 10 or 12 days, from Mocha in 20 days, and Suez in about a month; it should be remarked, that after September the Red Sea admits of no egress: ships consequently remaining there beyond that time, must continue there all the north-east moonson, and are said to have lost their passage; on this account the 25th of August is the latest day to which our cruisers are allowed to remain at Suez. From the Cape a passage may be made in five or six weeks, from the Mauritius, in three weeks or a month.

The south-west monsoon is also the most favorable season in which a passage may be made from Batavia or any ports to the eastward, through these southern straits; from Batavia to Bombay in particular, a passage may be made in about 35 days. From Madras and Bengal during the south-west monsoon, it is necessary to make the southern passage in order to reach Bombay; this will require in a passage from Madras, from 30 to 40 days, and from Bengal from 45 to 60 days, from the necessity of working out of the river, and beating down the Bay to clear Acheen-head; from the straits of Malacca it is an arduous task to sail for this port, or even to any one in the Peninsula of India, owing to the difficulty of wearing round Acheen-head.

We have now to treat of the north-east monsoon, or the season which may be considered as included between the 15th of August and the 15th of April, in which, the first circumstance that occurs to us to remark, is that our coast is rendered in a peculiar manner secure and favorable to navigation; it is now considered the most eligible period for sailing to the Persian Gulph, and in general to all ports to the westward: to Muscat the trip is generally 15, and to Bussorah 28 days. The time suitable for sailing to Mocha and Suez, is from the middle of February to the middle of March, when a passage may be made to the first in 18 days, to the second in 25. If a ship be delayed till the latter end of March or the beginning of April, the passage becomes more tedious, being then obliged to make the land to the southward of the island of Socatra, before the Gulph can be entered, on account of the southerly winds which prevail, and a current setting to the northward. After the 15th of April, a ship bound to the Red Sea would be very likely to lose her passage.

Between the 15th of August and the 15th of September, it may be considered favourable to sail to Madras and Bengal, but after this time the season is suspended, owing to the setting in of the North-east monsoon on the other side of India, which closes the ports on the coast of Coromandel, Golconda, and Orissa, between the 15th of October and the 15th of December, at least this period is excepted in common policies of insurance: after this time again a passage may be made to Madras in 30, and Bengal in 50 days, this season may be deemed unfavourable to the coast of Pegue and the straits of Malacca, but for the straits of Sunda, Batavia, for example, it is the best adapted: a passage thither may be made in 35 days.

With regard to the seasonable imports in this monsoon, it is at no time more advantageous than now for coming from the Coromandel Coast and in short the whole Bay: a passage may be made from Madras in 26 days, from Bengal in a month, and Penang a month. From the Persian Gulph it is no less favourable, the passage from Muscat being about 10 days; and from Bussorah 28. The Red Sea is now closed; nor is it reasonable to expect arrivals from the Cape or the Straits of Sunda; from the latter in particular it is almost impossible at this season to make a tolerable passage.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS.

LONDON, September 18.

The independence which France bestows upon the Republics which she has formed is, to be perfectly dependent upon her; and the liberty of doing what she pleases. "You shall be King, and I will be Viceroy over you."

A French Loan has been whispered at Madrid; but Don John, who is a sulky sort of a gentleman at times, declares he will let it alone.

Amsterdam once so distinguishable for the firmness of its police, and the decorum of its manners, is said to have now become the sink of vice and debauchery. Every street is crowded with prostitutes, and almost every house is a Brothel.

Wednesday last upwards of 300 French prisoners, taken by the Hazard sloop of war (coming from the Mauritius,) were landed at Liverpool; amongst many females captured, one heroic Joan of Arc was seen, who stood to her gun, and commanded the men during the action; her child accompanied her as she marched along guarded by British soldiers.

It now appears, that the united English, Russian, and Turkish fleets are to be employed in transporting from Greece to Alexandria the army of the Captain Pacha, who has left Widden, and is on his march to the Archipelago.

The books, manuscripts, and curiosities sent from the Vatican at Rome, and the Library of St. Mark at Venice, to Paris, have not received any damage in carriage. The manuscrpts are in the highest preservation, and are bound with much elegance. Among the antiquities are, a sacred vessel in gold filligree, of singular workmanship; two gold crosses, enriched with precious stones; two golden crowns, one of which belonged to King Flavius Agilius, and the other to Queen Theolinda. They are of a circular form, ornamented with stones, and were used at the coronation of the Lombard Kings. There are also some large tables of marble and porphyry, with Greek inscriptions upon them. All the curiosities have been placed in the Cabinet of Antiquities at Paris.

We have been told of the immense sums gained by our Naval Commanders. The public should also be acquainted with their liberality. The wife of Rovere, one of the Deputies sent to Cayenne, and one of those who are now arrived in England, was, with a great number of Priests, taken some time ago by Sir Edward Pellew, in a French frigate going to Cayenne. She had sold all her property in France to go to join her unhappy husband, and had with her about 3000l.—Sir Edward has given back to her the 3000l. and has paid the sailors their share out of his own purse.

[The following important article is a specimen of the ingenuity of London Editors, in the art of paragraph-making.]

The complaint in the Princess Amelia's knee, is said to yield to the remedies that are now going on, by the advice of the attending faculty, at Worthing, in Sussex, as far as respects the fears that from a defect in the synovia, there would be a constant stiffness in the joint; but it is doubtful when, young as she is, her Royal Highness will recover the full use of it.

Several accounts have been given of large floating vessels, but none equal to the following:—Philopater, an Egyptian King, built a vessel of 40 ranks of oars—more like a castle or palace than a ship; being in length 420 feet, and in breadth 72; containing 4000 rowers, 400 mariners, and 3000 soldiers.

It appears, by a private letter from that excellent prelate, the bishop of Killala, that the expences in keeping his visitants, the French, at his palace, in six days, amounted to 500l.

The French general who commanded at Killala, told the bishop, that during all the campaigns he had made with Buonapart he had never suffered so much as in the small stay he made in Ireland.

The following particulars come from a gentleman who was on the scene of action during the late momentous business in Ireland, to his friend in Bath. The circumstances may have appeared in the public papers before, but their being written by a private hand, adds to their interest and establishes their authenticity.

After giving an account of the surrender of the French troops as appeared in the Gazette, he says, "The rebels who were with them, are completely cut to pieces; they were put in the front of the battle by their new friends, and from their great slaughter, it it is generally understood on their giving way before our troops, they were cannonaded by the French according to their plan at the battle of Jemappe.—The French would have surrendered some days previous provided the Irish who were in their camp, should be included: this, lord Cornwallis absolutely refused, and the deluded rebels in consequence, had no quarter given them.

"You have no idea how admirably lord Cornwallis conducts himself; he adheres to no party whatever; he listens attentively to all, but judges and acts from himself.

"The limerick militia have gained immortal honor; they sustained the shock of the army for upwards of two hours. Col. Vereker has got infinite credit by it.—Lord Roden greatly distinguished himself, and his regiment behaved in a most gallant manner. In the first charge, to animate his men, he advanced so far before his regiment, that he fell into the hands of the enemy; which, when the regiment perceived, they determined to a man to retake him, or perish in the attempt—they accordingly charged again with such firmness and impetuosity, that they brought off their adored colonel in triumph. This little business has given such an energy to the army, and to militia regiments in particular, that I verily believe were the French to effect another landing, they would not keep their ground a second day."

Carnot, it is said, resides at a village near Linti, where, under an assumed name, he enjoys bare toleration, without the slightest favor or countenance from the Austrian government. He is busily employed in writing memoirs of the revolution, which will disclose many interesting secrets, and which more particularly will illustrate those military operations which he planned and of which the consequences seem likely to change the whole face of the earth.

The Roman territory continues to be dreadfully distracted. Troops are constantly marching from one place to another to quell the disturbances. The French commander in chief has published an order, making every commune responsible for the outrages committed within its jurisdiction.

In the article of liberty, the disinterestedness of the French may justly become proverbial.—They have been so liberal in the distribution of free Governments, that they have forgot to keep one for themselves.

September 28.

This day a mail arrived from Dublin.—Teeling, who many expected would receive a pardon, on account of the humanity he had shewn in restraining the vindictive passions of the rebels who had joined the French on their landing, has been executed, as a warning to other natural born subjects, not to deceive themselves by a belief, that acting under a foreign commission will be held a good plea for acts of rebellion.

September 29.

By the activity of our cruizers along the coast from Dunkirk to Ostend, the French troops in that quarter are greatly harrassed. Sometimes an attack is threatened at one point, sometimes at another, and the enemy's forces, much weakened by drafts to the Rhine, are exposed to incessant fatigue.

Of the companions of Pichegru, Ramelle was Commander of the National Guard of Paris; Willot was a Deputy, and had commanded the troops of the line at Marseilles; Rovere was a Marquis under the old Government, was deeply implicated in some of those bloody scenes which passed at Avignon in 1791; but in 1797, became one of the most zealous and formidable opponents of the Directory, in the Council of Five Hundred.

Suard, one of the writers sentenced to transportation, on the 4th of September, has found an asylum at the house of his old friend M Necker, at Copet, where that ex-minister resides, hitherto undisturbed by the storms of the Helvetic Revolution.

Pichegru professes the warmest gratitude for the kindness which he experienced from the officers of the Wassenaer, who shewed to this unfortunate general all the politeness of English gentlemen, and all the generosity of English seamen.

Barbarities of the United Irishmen.

DUBLIN, Sept. 22.

Wednesday night, a numerous gang of above 100 desperadoes, entered the house of Mrs. Lamb, near Old Bawn and Tallagh, in the county of Dublin, and plundered it of cash, and every portable article of value it contained. While the villains were in the house, they appeared to be under great apprehension, for they were frequently heard to say, "Boys, mind the piquet," which we suppose was a guard of their party they stationed at the outside, to be on the watch. They were going to hang a gentleman who was a visitor in the house, and had a rope about his neck for the purpose; but some less cruel than their comrades, interfered, and saved his life.

On Wednesday last a poor inoffensive man, named James Miley, was seized by a party of Wicklow Rebels, as he was saving his little crop of hay on the lands of Merganstown in that county: he was carried by them to a short distance from his own habitation, and placed against a wall by the merciless villains, who fired at him, and lodged three balls in his head. This unhappy man was by trade a carpenter; had not been enrolled in any yeomonry corps, or been at all forward in opposition to the Rebels; indeed, the remorseless villains did not accuse him of any other crime than that of being a Protestant.

Some accounts of the conſtitution of Egypt, Under the government of the Beys.

Egypt is called a Turkiſh Province, but it is in fact a Monarchical, Ariſtocratical, Military Government. The Beys or Governors of the eighty Provinces have all the power in their hands, and ſupport their authority by their confederates, the Mamelouk ſoldiery. The Sultan, indeed, keeps a Pacha in Cairo, the capital, but unleſs he were to be accompanied with an army, this Repreſentative could not exerciſe any degree of power. Four and twenty of the moſt powerful of the Beys compoſe a kind of Divan, which communicates its orders to the Pacha, which he publiſhes in the name of the Sultan. Almoſt all the Beys are Mamelouks, that is manumitted chriſtian ſlaves from Georgia, Circaſſia, &c. &c. who have embraced the Mohammedan religion, and have riſen gradually from the ſituation of a common ſoldier to the rank of Bey.

The name of Mamelouk is given to thoſe children who have been carried off by merchants or robbers from Georgia, Circaſſia, Natolia, and the other provinces of the Ottoman Empire, and afterwards expoſed to public ſale in the public market at Conſtantinople, or Cairo. The Egyptain grandees, who themſelves have a ſimilar origin, educate theſe children in their houſes, and prepare them for being their ſucceſſors in their dignities. At preſent theſe foreigners alone can attain the rank of Bey, and be inveſted with public offices. The law on this ſubject is ſo preciſe that the ſon of a Bey never can ſucceed to his father's ſtation. Commonly the ſons of the Beys enter into the army, and the Divan aſſigns them a conſiderable revenue.

Almoſt all the Mamelouks are ſprung from chriſtian parents. After they are purchaſed, they are compelled to embrace the Mohammedan religion, and learn the Turkiſh and Arabian languages. After they have learnt to read and write, they are inſtructed in the Koran.

From their earlieſt youth likewiſe, the Mamelouks are taught to ride, and the exerciſe of the ſpear, the ſabre, and other arms. They are conſtantly exerciſing in military evointions, inured to the heat of the climate, and to endure the parching drought of the deſarts. By theſe exerciſes they attain health, vigour and courage. In order to make good ſoldiers they only require to be inſtructed in European tactics. At preſent, however, they fight without any kind of order, and are totally ignorant of artillery. The number of the Mamelouks is from 3000 to 6000.

When the Turkiſh emperor Selim, in the year 1517, conquered Egypt, he endeavored (to preſerve this important conqueſt) to gain the favour of the Mamelouks. For this reaſon he made little alteration in their form of government, and in a treaty of peace granted them great privileges. By this treaty the Beys were authoriſed to ſuſpend from his office, and denounce to the Pope, the Pacha, or Viceroy of the Sultan, if he happened to incur their diſpleaſure, or was guilty of any encroachment on their power. By this treaty likewiſe, they were bound annually to pay the ſum of 500,000 aſſani to the Porte. This ſum was afterwards raiſed to 800,000, or about 150,000l. ſterling —The Beys, however, commonly retain great ſums for the repair of the canals and fortifications, and do not remit the half of it to Conſtantinople. Beſides they are bound to ſupply a certain quantity wheat, and nearly 150,000l. for the ſupport of the tomb of Medina, where Mahomet is buried, and the temple of Mecca. Upon theſe conditions was the unlimited authority of the Beys over all the inhabitants of Egypt recognized.

The Beys are ſenſible of the advantages of their ſituation, and abuſe their power moſt groſſly. A Pacha retains his authority only while he favours their views. If he attempts to defend the intereſts of his maſter or the Egyptians, he is immediately conſidered a traitor; the Divan aſſembles and ſends him about his buſineſs. The Beys who are at the head of the provinces and of the troops, accordingly have all the power in their hands, and the people is completely ſubject to their arbitrary will

The Gazette.

PHILADELPHIA,

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 26.

☞ THIS DAY'S MAILS Brings nothing New.

THE public attention has been called during the paſt week to the flagrant and atrocious fact of the exiſtence of a ſociety of United Iriſhmen in this City. The meeting which gave riſe to our remarks, has doubtleſs been held, and the propoſed plans agreed on. Inſtead therefore of relaxing in our attention to theſe deſigns, there is a manifeſt call for increaſed vigilance. Their apparently inoffenſive deſignation ought by no means to deter us from ſuſpecting them of the moſt bloody purpoſes. When I beho'd a man evidently plotting my deſtruction, it is of but little import whether he ſtrike under the name of an highwayman or an United Iriſhman, a burglar, or a peep o'day boy, an aſſaſſin, or a Defender. The ſanguinary watchword aſſumed by this daring gang of outlaws, ſhould arm every man in deteſtation and abhorrence againſt them, and every United Iriſhman ought to be hunted from the country, as much as a wolf or a tyger.—For a more bloody and remorſeleſs band of organized aſſaſſins never polluted the fountains of ſociety. As there is little doubt that delegates attended at this meeting from the affiliat ſocieties of New-York and elſewhere, the attention of the Editors of public papers will be profitably turned to aſcertaining this fact. Whether any and what Iriſhmen of notorious character have recently left the place, what the oſtenſible, what the probable buſineſs they could have in hand;—theſe are points which demand the attention and co operation of ſpirited and well diſpoſed citizens generally, in expoſing the darkeſt and moſt nefarious conſpiracy, which ever yet found abettors in America. I have a liſt of members of the ſociety—to this I ſhall always be happy to receive additions.—Facts, alſo, identifying the membership of any individual whatever, will be uſeful and neceſſary. When as complete as I can make it, the names of the whole of them ſhall be publiſhed, from the gloomy, cloſe-working, cut-throat looking ſon of Galen, to the fatuitous and ſputtering Bookſeller, though the knives of the whole bloody gang were at my breaſt. Similar liſts ſhould be collected every where, and the villains dragged forth to light. For light to them is death.

When their majeſties of France, invaded Ireland, they ſet forth one of their objects to be, the reſtoration of the Iriſh to the unreſtrained enjoyment of the Catholic worſhip, for that they themſelves, being Catholics, the taſk would be peculiarly grateful to them. To the Pope, when they invaded his territory, unbounded profeſſions of reſpect and reverence were held out, and he was acknowledged as the legitimate and divine Paſtor of the Holy Catholic Church Univerſal. To the Muſſelmen, they exhibit themſelves in the light of true believers in the Mahometan faith, and Buonaparte would no doubt perform as many genuflexions per diem, as Abu Bekr is ſaid to have done, to get poſſeſſion of the treaſures of Conſtantinople or of India. Thus theſe blaſpheming Frenchmen, amidſt all the aberrations of their infidelity, prove that they remember at leaſt one paſſage in the Bible, by becoming all things to all men.

Some people are led to ſuppoſe, that becauſe the Arabs are a looſe and diſorderly banditti, that the army of Buonaparte, being ſo powerful and well-appointed, muſt triumph over all their efforts. But there are a number of circumſtances, abſtracted from the conſideration of phyſical force, which muſt operate the deſtruction of the French. A celebrated traveller (who was afterwards ſent by the Directory, to find how the wind blew in America) tells us, that from March to November, the heat to an European, is almoſt inſupportable,—that during this whole ſeaſon, the air is inflamed, the ſky ſparkling, and the heat oppreſſive to all unaccuſtomed to it. The ſoutherly winds are by the natives called "poiſonous winds." Theſe are of ſuch extreme heat and aridity, that no animited body expoſed to them can withſtand their fatal influence. During the three days that they generally laſt, the ſtreets are deſerted; and woe to the traveller whom this wind ſurpriſes remote from ſhelter. When it blows longer than three days, it is inſupportable. The inhabitants are often almoſt blinded by drifts of ſand. All theſe comforts muſt be peculiarly acceptable to an army accuſtomed to contend with no other oppoſition than the force of the feeble and effeminate Italians, or the diſpirited and broken legions of the Emperor. Beſides, it is the very diſorder of the Arabs; which renders them formidable. They are an inviſible enemy. Mounted on horſes as fleet as the wind, and ſeldom moving in a large maſs, they beſet their enemy in ſmall detachments beat up his quarters, cut off his convoys, and harraſs his men with inceſſant alarms. It is in vain they are purſued, and the nature of their warfare exempts them from the poſſibility of defeat. The emperor Julian marched an army of 50,000 men againſt barbarians of the ſame nature, character, and, in part, of the ſame country. His force was ſelected from the flower of his army, and the beſt appointed of the empire. A rapid tide of ſucceſs marked his career, 'till, arrived at the Banks of the Euphrates, he was prevailed on, by ſome inſidious Zopyrus, to deſtroy his fleet and tranſports. Julian ſtill advanced—but he advanced to deſtruction. The barbarians inceſſantly hovered round him, and were no ſooner diſperſed on the one hand, than they appeared in greater numbers on the other. Irritated at the vexations of an enemy he deemed contemptible, he attacked, diſperſed and purſued them on all ſides, after killing immenſe numbers of them. In three days Julian was no more; and his army, reduced to one quarter of its number, capitulated with the depiſed enemy. The fate of General Braddock and his army, of General Harmar, of General St. Clair, are inſtances ſtrongly in point, and demonſtrate the inevitable dangers that attend a remote warfare againſt a ſavage or barbarous enemy. Diſcipline is no qualification to an army that has to contend with ſuch enemies; the greateſt veterans become the ſureſt prey. Whoever gives to theſe conſiderations their true force, muſt be perſuaded that the mighty hoſt of Buonaparte, long ere this day, lie ſcattered lifeleſs o'er the ſands of Egypt; and I only wiſh, that inſtead of 30, he had 300,000 men with him.

The ſix following ſtates have ratified, in the following order, the amendment to the conſtitution, propoſed by the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts,—and which goes to the excluſion of foreigners from the office of Preſident and Vice Preſident, and from a ſeat in either houſe of congreſs, viz.

Maſſachuſetts,
New-Hampſhire,
New-York,
Rhode-Iſland,
Vermont and one other.

So that the final adoption of this ſalutary and neceſſary amendment to the Conſtitution may be conſidered as certain.

Mr Gallatin doubtleſs views with much concern the approaching period to his patriotic labors. How cruel was it to lay a plot which muſt inevitably cut ſhort the melliſluous warblings of his tuneful tongue.

With whatever reluctance the horrible example before our eyes may induce us to view innovations, every patriotic American muſt rejoice in the proſpect of having exo ic revolutionizers excluded from our councils, at a time when we find the intrigues of our own varlets a match for all our watchfulneſs and energy.

The miraculous traveller, Bruce, tells us of a cuſtom, prevalent amongſt the Egyptians, of cutting ſteakes off the haunches of live cattle. This practice may prove extremely convenient to the French under Buonaparte—It is certainly extremely congenial to the humanity of their natures.

It is ſuppoſed by ſome, that owing to the famed fertility of Egypt, and its abundance in corn and every kind of grain, the French will find little difficulty in ſupplying an army of 30,000 men. But as the harveſt is in the month of March, and Buonaparte's arrival took place in Auguſt, theſe calculations are probably deceptive.

The ſecond Seſſion of the ſixth Congreſs, commences in Philadelphia, this day week, conformably to the Conſtitution.

The French priſoners confined at New-Caſtle, attempted lately to break jail, but were reſtrained by the vigilance and activity of the keepers. It is not improbable they had received intimation of the deſign to tranſport them back to their bleſſed land of liberty, and that they were animated to this attempt by a deſire to eſcape the diſagreeable deſtiny.

A gentleman contends that the Babarity of an enemy can be no ſource of alarm to the French; as this has long been a conſpicuous trait of their republicaniſm, and having, by long practice refined it into ſyſtem, they are unqueſtionably the greateſt Barbarians in the Univerſe.

We are happy to find that the ſerious attention of the citizens has at length been turned to an object of the laſt importance to us all—the means of preventing the future introduction of the Yellow-Fever into the city.

A committee has been appointed, at a meeting of citizens to confer with the Board of Health, on the ſelection of ſuch judicious and intelligent perſons in each ward as can be found willing to undertake the buſineſs, who may, when clothed with due authority from the Board, examine and aſcertain what houſes and what bedding there may appear good grounds to believe are infected, and to uſe the proper means of purification: Alſo, to deviſe ways and means to raiſe ſufficient funds to carry into execution the purpoſes of their appointment.

The above mentioned committee has alſo been conſtituted a committee of correſpondence, for the purpoſe of communicating with the principal towns in the Union, and a circular letter has been written, accordingly.

A memorial has further been prepared for preſentation to the ſtate Legiſlature.

The Committee above mentioned, conſiſts of the following Gentlemen.

Extract of a letter from Wilmington, North Carolina, dated November 3d, 1798.

"Since my laſt, almoſt all the remaining part of this unfortunate town, has been deſtroyed by fire. It broke out about two o'clock in the morning, in a large houſe occupied by one Pariſh, nearly adjoining Henry Urguhart, which deſtroyed all that ſquare up to the market, and down to Maſter's—thence acroſs to the ſquare of which my ſtore made a corner, and ſwept the whole up to Berquin's large houſe, one or two ſmall buildings excepted, I ſuppoſe about one hundred and thirty. Sixty dwelling houſes ware-houſes and ſtores were conſumed. It ſtopped at Bernard's, without conſuming his houſe."

A CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.
JOHN A. SHAEFFER, of Philadelphia, who has for a few years past been in the southern States, has had the effrontery to draw several Bills of Exchange on Timothy Pickering, Esq. To prevent further imposition, I have to request the printers of Newspapers in the United States to publish this for the benefit of their fellow-citizens. SAMUEL MEREDITH,

(Price 1-8th of a Dollar.)
AN ORATION,
Pronounced July 4, 1798,
At the request of the Inhabitants of the Town of BOSTON, in commemoration of the anniversary of American Independence.
By JOSIAH QUINCY.
"The inroads upon our public liberty, call for reparation—The wrongs we have sustained, call for—Justice. That Reparation and that Justice, may yet be obtained, by Union, Spirit, and Firmness. But to divide and conquer was the maxim of the Devil in the garden of Eden, and to disunite and enslave hath been the principle of all his votaries from that period to the present."
Observations on the Boston Port-Bill, &c. p. 78 by the late J. Quincy, jun.
